

The Art of Protest

The Oscar Grant Memorial Arts Project

By Christine Joy Ferrer

People are angry. Sometime after the midnight hour, a 22-year-old black man was murdered on New Year's Day—another innocent victim of police brutality. His name was Oscar Grant, shot and killed in Oakland, California by a Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) agency policy officer. Onlookers video-phoned the horrific spectacle: Grant surrounded by officers, unarmed, bleeding to death on the station platform, his arms shackled behind his back, his face pressed against the cement.

■ Several hours later, Laron Blankenship, a friend of the deceased, locked himself in a sound studio. He flashed back to the words Grant had spoken to him one day, “No matter what happens, even if I was to die, don't quit doing this music thing.” His hands trembling, crying and near broken down, Blankenship produced a compelling rap anthem dedicated to Grant, “Never be Forgotten.” He sings, “I know for a fact your soul is still alive and you will never be forgotten.”

■ A few days later, artist and activist, Melanie Cervantes' memories flooded back to the many instances of police brutality she witnessed growing up in Los Angeles. At five years old she watched the local library call security to kick her father out of the building. As a teenager, police victimized her peers on a regular basis. She says the video-taped beating of Rodney King and the later riots induced post-traumatic stress, which was re-triggered by Grant's all too similar death. Spurred by these emotions, Cervantes and fellow artist Jesus Barraza created a visual call for justice that would resonate within the community and beyond. In a single evening, within the confines of their kitchen, they produced the first 50 silkscreen copies of their widely distributed poster bearing the slogan “Justice for Oscar Grant, Justice for Gaza, End Government Sponsored Murder in the Ghettos of Oakland and Palestine.”

■ One week later, during a protest demanding

“The role of the revolutionary artist is to make revolution irresistible.”

—Toni Cade Bambara
Writer and activist

justice for Grant, a young Mexican woman's voice singing in her ancestral Nahuatl language inspired graffiti artist Desi of Weapons of Mass Expression, while he painted the face of Grant in vibrant colors on the plywood sheets boarded over the windows of a 14th Street storefront. It read, “Rest in Power Oscar Grant” and “All Power to the People.”

Thousands have been appalled by the Oscar Grant shooting and have taken a stand to fight injustice. Many have chosen to creatively express their stance through the arts. Its forms have been many: Songs have been written and dedicated to Grant. Poems, paintings, and posters have been created. Graffiti artists have painted murals. These artists have contributed works to the Oscar Grant Memorial Arts Project, an online, print, and multimedia compilation of works dedicated to Grant's memory.

Editor Jesse Clarke at Race, Poverty and the Environment says he co-sponsored the project because, “Art is an essential element in building the movements for social change. Oscar Grant's murder is a catalytic event that crystallizes underlying social and political tensions.” Clarke says, “If his death is memorialized and communicated as a representation of those tensions, it can help build a movement. Similar tragic incidents which do not get codified can leave people feeling traumatized, disempowered, and more isolated.”

Movement Art

From the civil rights movement in the United States to the antiapartheid struggle in Africa and environmental activism internationally, art has been used as a symbol, to frame the message, to attract resources, to communicate information, and foster emotions.

“The strongest voice I have is my art,” says graphic artist Santos Shelton, another contributor to the memorial project. “Every day, people of color in this country are reminded that they don’t matter by the powers that be.” He says he made his piece entitled “Fighting for the Lost” because “Regardless of the fact that a president is black, the generations of hatred and social injustice that are still within society will take way longer to change.”

According to sociologist Jacqueline Adams, movement art helps communicate a coherent identity, mark membership, and cement commitment to the cause. It’s not only pervasive in many movements, it’s instrumental in the achievement of a movement’s objectives.¹ Craig McGarvey, quoted in Art, Power, and Social Change agrees. He says art is a catalyst that makes change possible as it shapes the dreams, aspirations, and problems of people, thus inspiring them to work with activists/organizers to develop their collective authority and ability to build their community.²

“We dream it and then we manifest it into some form of reality and then it can actually happen. It’s an accessible way for people to identify with the issues and the movement. You can argue with protesters but not with the painting,” says muralist Desi.

Movement art is a crucial means of attracting people, pulling them together, and opening up their interconnectedness, McGarvey explains. Cultural change is made possible by the connecting influence of cultural exchange.

“Two summers ago, myself and a lot of other artists were working on an antialcoholism mural at the Raindeer Indian reservation in northern Cheyenne, Montana,” says Desi, reflecting on an experience where he witnessed people provoked to change by an artwork. “It was two to three stories tall, in the center of town, at an intersection. During the process, people were crying. Many came up to us, emotionally moved by the piece, promising to check themselves into Alcoholics Anonymous.”

A Catalyst for Social Change

From art emerges political and cultural resistance. We’ve seen it in the Civil Rights movement through the tradition of music in the African-American church, and in the farmworker rights movement through teatro in the fields. The birth of the hip-hop movement in the Bronx paved the way for a marginalized group of black and Latino youth to express themselves, communicate their experiences, and criticize social inequality and poverty. The use of photography by the Mothers of the Disappeared at Plaza de Mayo, in the context of post-dictatorship Argentina, reminds us of the state violence done to those denied the most basic human rights and the recognition of citizenship in a functioning democracy.³

On behalf of mostly elderly Filipino and Chinese tenants who were fighting a battle against eviction at the International Hotel in the 1970s, artists protested alongside tenants and other advocates to become the

Illustration:

© 2009 Jocelyn Goode

cultural arm of the struggle by silk-screening protest posters, painting murals on the I Hotel, and producing exhibitions and publications. It wasn't until hundreds of artists marched down Mission Street, with their faces painted white protesting the displacement of people of color in San Francisco, did the global mass media finally pay attention to the anti-gentrification message advocates had spent years trying to get across.⁴

Rooted beneath these acts of artistic liberation, produced by the soul's inherent expressive nature, is the artist's pain. Lives entrenched in poverty and hunger, a desperate need for healthcare, gender inequality, police brutality, institutionalized racism, and the myriad other evils of the system create deep wounds in the psyche. Creative visionaries recognize these injuries and their efforts are intrinsic to the healing process.

"The complexity of the racial reality comes down to the economy. Crimes happen because of poverty, which happens because of no jobs, yet millions of dollars are going into the police force," says Cervantes. "I hope people see how various struggles are connected."

"Police harassment is a symptom of the prison-industrial complex—it's more valuable to put people into prison than to educate. It's about trying to maintain power," Desi argues.

The Struggle Continues

In 2009, in honor of Oscar Grant, artists are once again compelled to speak out using the greatest gift that they know how to use. They hope to spark change, fight corruption, and build stronger communities. Their designs not only critique the failures of the system that denies many of their human rights, but also pose solutions and open avenues to social health.

"The last time I spoke with Oscar Grant was the day he called me to wish me a happy birthday on December 3. I felt like getting back at the police officer. But instead, I wrote," says Grant's friend Blankenship. "I grabbed a dictionary to look up a couple of words to define the pain I felt—'overwhelmed,' 'overexposed,' and 'despair,'—another innocent life gone. But my rhymes are not just for my situation. It's for those that have lost someone dear and are feeling like life's a wasteland."

For poetry writer and activist Dee Allen, this was the best way she could pay homage to the memory of an African American working class man who was denied his right to a fair chance.

"Bay Area Rapid Transit's management needs to know that the public will not forget this act of violence. No community—black, brown or white—needs young sacrificial lambs slaughtered because of some cop's racist/classist power trip," says Allen.

Brutality, never an "accident"

It's systemic

And replicates itself

In different cities to the nth degree.

Bleeding

Stony hearts blame such handiwork

On "a few bad apples."

*And everyone knows
How that tired old maxim goes.
Tell that to the last
Victim inside the chalkline.*
(Excerpt from Face Down by Dee Allen.)

Houston hip-hop artist Rukus chose to reach out specifically to Oscar Grant's daughter. He wrote a song called "Dear Tatiana" like a letter, and dedicated it to her.

"We all know that this is unjust. People are gonna' march. People are gonna' protest. There's gonna' be a big court battle. Hopefully, this guy will end up going to prison," says Rukus. "But at the end of the day when the dust is settled, when the last person has marched and put down their picket sign, there's still gonna' be a young girl that doesn't have a father."

*Dear Tatiana,
Please don't ask why does a man have to die
just to touch the sky.
I don't have the heart to lie and say it's alright when your daddy isn't home tonight...
This is for father's day, this is for single parent fathers who really give a damn and take care of their daughters. Ay.
This is the way I pray, wishing for a better day.
I'm staring at the picture of concrete where a brother lay.*
(Lyrics from Dear Tatiana.)

The Power of Icon

The images created in memory of Oscar Grant, from the compelling figure with a halo and a spear, to the countless graffiti and poster prints of his face, bring to mind icons of past struggles.

One can see the resonance with "Handala," the image created by Palestinian cartoonist Naji al-Ali's, which portrays a 10-year-old refugee boy with ragged clothes, bare feet, and his back to the audience—a symbol of Palestinian struggle and defiance.⁵

One can hear thousands of demonstrators marching through Mexico City chanting "Todos somos Marcos (We are all Marcos)," referring to the Zapatista Subcomandante who was being hunted by the Mexican government.

Oscar Grant's memory lives on—encased in collective artistry, something that can't be killed. Epitaph expressions painted on the side of buildings, gates, and even on mailboxes, echo the heart of the masses, "I am Oscar Grant." ■

Endnotes

1. Adams, Jacqueline. "Art in Social Movements, Sociological Forum, Vol 17-1 (March 2002): 21.
2. David, Emmanuel A. and McCaughan, Edward J. "Editors' Introduction: Art, Power, and Social Change." Social Justice Vol. 33, No. 2 (2006): 1-4.
3. Ibid. page 3
4. Martinez, Maria X. "The Art of Social Justice." Social Justice Vol. 34, No. 1 (2007): 1-4
5. Naji al-Ali remarked that "this being that I have invented will certainly not cease to exist after me, and perhaps it is no exaggeration to say that I will live on with him after my death." www.najialali.com

Photo:
On a wall in Oakland.
© 2009 Elliot Johnson

Christine Joy Ferrer is the curator of the Oscar Grant Memorial Arts Project. She recently graduated from San Francisco State University with a dual major in journalism and dance. She is the publishing assistant for Race, Poverty, and the Environment. To see the full compilation of creative works in the Oscar Grant Memorial Arts Project visit: www.urbanhabitat/rpe/oscar.

& the Race, Poverty Environment

a journal for social and environmental justice

Editors Emeritus

Carl Anthony
Luke Cole

Publisher

Juliet Ellis

Editor

B. Jesse Clarke

Design and Layout

B. Jesse Clarke

Copyediting and Proofreading

Merula Furtado, Marcy Rein
Christine Joy Ferrer

Publishing Assistant

Christine Joy Ferrer

Photography

Brooke Anderson, Scott Braley,
Derek Chung

Urban Habitat

Board of Directors

Joe Brooks (Chair)
PolicyLink

Romel Pascual (Vice-Chair)
Mayor's Office, City of Los Angeles

Tamar Dorfman (Treasurer)
S.F. Mayor's Office of Community Development

Carl Anthony
Cofounder, Urban Habitat

Malo Andre Hutson
Department of City and Regional Planning University of California, Berkeley

Felicia Marcus
Natural Resources Defense Council

Arnold Perkins
Alameda Public Health Department (retired)

Organizations are listed for identification purposes only.

Subscribe to RP&E

Annual subscriptions are $20 for groups and individuals; $40 for institutions. (Free for grassroots groups upon request.) Send subscription checks to:
RP&E, 436 14th Street, #1205, Oakland, CA 94612.

Subscribe online at www.urbanhabitat.org

© 2009 by the individual creators and Urban Habitat. For specific reprint information, queries or submissions, please email editor@urbanhabitat.org.

ISSN#1532-2874

RP&E was first published in 1990 by Urban Habitat Program and the California Rural Legal Assistance Foundation's Center on Race, Poverty & the Environment. In the interest of dialogue, RP&E publishes diverse views. Opinions expressed are not necessarily those of the editors, Urban Habitat, or its funders.

Photos: Front cover: Everyone Has the Right to... ©2006 Robert Terrell and Jean McIntosh, Courtesy of Hobos to Street People Exhibition
Inside cover: (Front) Oscar Grant Mural (detail) by Desi © Thomas Hawk (Back) Memorial art by Joy Gloria Liu. Photo © Diana Pei Wu
Above : Clean and Safe Ports demonstration. © 2008 Brooke Anderson

the Race, Poverty Environment

a journal for social and environmental justice

www.urbanhabitat.org

First published as a joint project of the Urban Habitat Program and the California Rural Legal Assistance Foundation, RP&E is now published twice annually by Urban Habitat and is dedicated to exploring the intersection of race, class, and environmental and social justice.

Don't miss any of our passionate, in-depth discussions of important social topics!

Support RP&E: subscribe today!

Use the form below or order online:
www.urbanhabitat.org/subscribe

- Spring 1990 ▶ Earth Day
- Summer 1990 ▶ Cultural Diversity
- Winter 1991 ▶ Women of Color
- Spring 1991 ▶ Pesticides
- Summer 1991 ▶ Energy
- Winter 1992 ▶ The Summit
- Spring 1992 ▶ Asian/Pacific Islanders
- Summer 1992 ▶ Water
 - Fall 1992 ▶ Native Nations in 1992
- Spring 1993 ▶ Urban Problems
- Summer 1993 ▶ Population and Immigration
 - Fall 1993 ▶ Latinos and the Environment
- Spring 1994 ▶ Military Base Conversion
- Winter 1995 ▶ Environmental Justice and the Law
- Summer 1995 ▶ Nuclear Technology & Communities of Color
 - Fall 1995 ▶ Social Justice and Transportation
- Spring 1996 ▶ Multicultural Environmental Education
 - Fall 1996 ▶ The Border
- Winter 2000 ▶ A Place at the Table: Food & Environmental Justice
- Winter 2001 ▶ Reclaiming Land and Community: Brownfields & Environmental Justice
- Summer 2002 ▶ Fixin' to Stay: Anti-Displacement Policy Options & Community Response
- Summer 2003 ▶ Where Do We Go from Here? A Look at the Long Road to Environmental Justice
 - Fall 2003 ▶ Governing from the Grassroots: EJ and Electoral Activism
- Summer 2004 ▶ Reclaiming our Resources: Imperialism and EJ
- Winter 2005 ▶ Burden of Proof: Using Research for EJ
- Winter 2006 ▶ Moving the Movement: Transportation Justice
- Summer 2006 ▶ Getting Ready for Change: Green Economics and Climate Justice
- Spring 2007 ▶ Just Jobs: Organizing for Economic Justice
 - Fall 2007 ▶ Educating for Equity
- Spring 2008 ▶ Who Owns Our Cities?
 - Fall 2008 ▶ Race and Regionalism

Yes! I want an annual subscription to Race, Poverty & the Environment.
Sent free of charge to grassroots groups upon request.
 $20 (Individuals) $40 (Institutions)

Yes! I want to support the advancement of social, economic, and environmental justice in the Bay Area and beyond.
I want to support Urban Habitat with a tax-deductible donation of:
 $25 $50 $100 $500 $1,000 Other $ _____

Name: _____
Organization: _____
Address: _____
State: _____ Zip: _____ Email: _____

A check is enclosed Please charge my Visa/MasterCard
Visa/MC Number: _____ Exp. Date: _____
(Please include the 3-4 digit card verification number found on the back of most credit cards.)

Signature: _____